Tulane School of Professional Advancement's Media + Design students were awarded an impressive combination of 25 awards at the Advertising Club of New Orleans' ADDY Award Program on Friday, Feb. 3, including Best of Show, Overall Best of Show, Runner-up, Judge's Pick, as well as a combination of Gold and Silver ADDY Awards.

SoPA's Media + Design students have swept the local awards show for several years and students have advanced to compete at the district and national level as well, competing against programs in the 7th District of the American Advertising Federation (AAF) comprised of Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Tennessee, and southern Louisiana.

In addition to the students' big night, Tulane SoPA Media + Design Program Director Rebecca Carr had a memorable night of her own. Carr was honored with the prestigious AAF Educator of the Year Award.

Of the students' work, Carr said: "I beam with pride thinking of our students and their exceptional work. Now, these talented students can add 'award-winning' to their resumes and portfolios. That's what this workforce-aligned program is all about. The icing on the cake is how excited they get when they find out about their awards and recognition. Whether they are just entering the program or nearing graduation, seeing the look on their faces at the awards ceremony never gets old."

"We've worked hard to build a program that produces award-winning designers," added Associate Program Director Amanda Garcia, PhD, and it's so humbling to see so many of them recognized among professionals in the industry. The students we teach and mentor, are the future of this industry and we couldn't be prouder."

The redesigned Media + Design program, which launched two and half years ago under the direction of Amanda Garcia, PhD, Rebecca Carr, MFA, and Tamar Gregorian, PhD, is an innovative, workforce-aligned program that houses the integrated disciplines of advertising, digital marketing, graphic design and public relations under one roof.

“There’s a strong sense of community within the Tulane SoPA Media + Design Program, and it’s because of this that I’ve found the confidence to really embrace my unique design interests and style, refining them into strengths. Seeing what we’ve been able to push ourselves to achieve through each other’s creativity and support is incredible. I can’t think of a more exciting or motivating way to close out my time at Tulane,” said Digital Design student Shiloh Latham.

“While I am very proud of this award, I am even more proud of my growth at SoPA. I've received an abundance of acceptance, support, and love; with all of that, I've grown so much more confident in myself and what I am capable of as a future designer. The Women's Bodies Campaign was a project I completed in Design for Good, inspired by my young daughter. Our bodies survive many battles, and the perception of what they should look like should never be one of them,” said Digital Design student Michelle Keogh.

“My heart both celebrates and aches at the thought of my upcoming graduation, earning a degree is something a younger me never thought I would achieve, the me I am today wants to stay with the family which has made me believe in myself,” concluded Keogh.
